How To Do Driver's License Makeup At Home

Step 5: Add finishing touches

A creamy, hydrating blush works best for this look because you want your cheeks to really pop and catch the light. Scibelli says to place it "towards the outer cheek area and a bit higher than usual, to give a more lifted appearance." From there, make sure to set the look with pressed powder. You can add this under the eyes to really seal it in.

Add your favorite mascara to lift up the lashes, and then apply a winged eyeliner in a lifted motion upward towards the outer corners of the eyes. "You can also thicken the outer edges of the line to accentuate that lift," says Scibelli. "Since this look is all about over-accentuating, you can finish the look with a bit of an overlined lip with a lip liner and a nude berry gloss to add that shine and dimension on the lips," he adds.
